Camping in the Rockies is one of the necessary experiences of those who visit the "Nation's Wonderland," YELLOWSTONE PARK. It is 56x65 miles in area and many of the richest beauties are far from hotel or even a wagon road. The pack mule here is worth his highest value. In the high altitudes of the Rockies the air is so pure and dry, all that is needed at night is plenty of covers to keep warm; as far as eating is concerned, the exhilarating tramps here and there taking in the countless beauties to be seen in Yellowstone Park bring appetites ready to eat almost anything that is provided. The regular tour of Yellowstone requires five days, but for those who have the time and means many times five days can be delightfully spent among the ever-changing scenes of waterfalls, geysers, canons, gorges, lakes, mountains and plains. Crystal Falls, which is here but dimly shown, is only one of many scores of dashing mountain torrents to be found in Yellowstone Park.
